

The PATH

Sketching Toronto

Sketching Toronto is a creative walking tour of Canada's largest city and its vibrant neighborhoods. Studio Shtot celebrates our hometown through a series of creative, colorful, and often abstract sketches.

It's something of a joke in Toronto about getting lost in the PATH, a series of tunnels that connect the major buildings in the financial district. The tunnels were planned by individual building owners, not following a centralized plan, creating a labyrinthine space of repeating food courts and elevatory lobbies that only differentiate themselves by the type of sheetrock used as decoration. In the north, the PATH starts at the Eaton Centre and Yonge-Dundas Square. It runs under the TD Centre and through Union Station before reaching the CN Tower and Aquarium. Branches go as far as the Jack Layton Ferry Terminal and Metro Centre.

Raphael Gutteridge for Studio Shtot

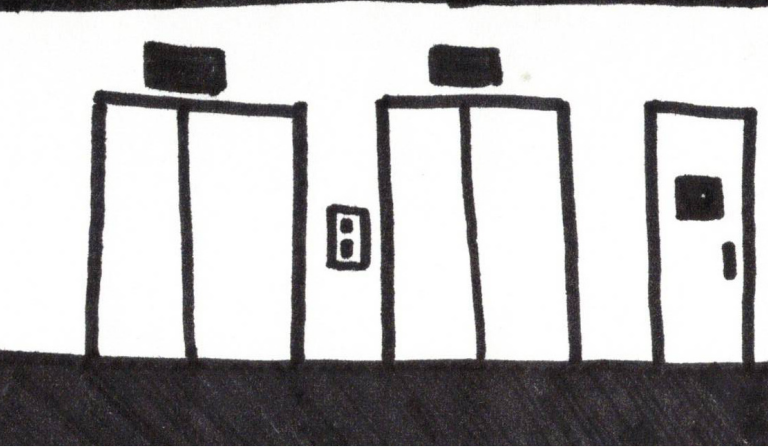

A Corner in the Tunnels

Eaton Centre Escalators

Elevator Bank

Under Roy Thompson Hall

